Make Extra Money FFL License

As soon as you are a certified FFL license holder, numerous opportunities to secure extra income will be open to you. As a first thing you should know is that you can set up accounts directly with wholesalers and manufactures, which means you will have access to wholesaler rates. As we've mentioned already, the wholesaler rates are quite often about 30% lower than what you're familiar with from common retail sales. Certainly, this is no rule per say and it might not be applicable as a general rule and you will soon discover that rates differ from one wholesaler to another.

Another benefit of FFLTRUST.com is that you mustn't be concerned about having to do a lot of shopping around. And one of the advantages of the FFLTRUST.com guide is that the shopping has already been done for the members! We don't just lineup the best weapons that wholesalers in the industry have to offer, but we also provide a notification service on who has got the best prices on certain items on sale. This way, you can boost your income (or reduce the cost of that firearms you've always wished).

Another way to help minimize cost is shopping around for the best shipping rates. There is quite a large variety of shipping companies, so the thing that makes most sense is finding out which company is the most suitable for you. Another aspect to consider is looking for any programs that you can join up with that minimize your cost or offer you a Loyalty or volume discount. For example we've found a way that saves 45% on firearm shipping, that as a result gave us quite the competitive advantage.

FFL Dealer – NICS background check

The Brady Handgun Violence Prevention Act, aka the Brady Law or Brady Act, altered the entire way that the firearms businesses work when it comes down to the sale of firearms. This was the directive that put into place the necessary NICS background checks for the sale of weapons by a FFL holder. President Bill Clinton has signed the Brady Law in effect on November 30, 1993.

There are three specific situations when a NICS check can be started. The first is transferring a firearm by a FFL dealer. The second is, according to the law, providing local, state, or federal criminal justice agencies complete info that could be connected to a explosive or firearms that has a related permit or license. The third permits the NICS to provide information to BATFE (Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms, and Explosives) about any activity, it being civil or criminal law enforcement related, to the Gun Control Act of 1968 or the National Firearms Act.

The entire point of the Brady Law is to ensure preventing criminals or other inadequate persons from getting their hands on firearms. The only way to accomplish this is checking the name and characteristics of the person buying the firearm through a number of separate national databases. The National Crime Information Center (NCIC), the Interstate Identification Index (III), and the NICS index are a couple of the databases used. The databases of the DHS's US Immigrant and Customs Enforcement (ICE) are also run for non-US citizens.

Even if a background check is needed for firearms transactions for FFL dealers in all 50 states, not all states have chosen to participate in the federal NICS program. Such a state is called Point of Contact (POC). In such a case, the state will select a state agency that can be used as the contact point between the FFL dealer and the NICS. Normally the FFL dealer will contact to perform the background check. Some states are partial POC states in which FFL dealers use the POC for handgun checks and simply get in contact with the NICS directly for the long gun background checks. The list of POC states includes Hawaii, Oregon, California, Nevada, Utah, Colorado, Illinois, Tennessee, Florida, Connecticut, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and Virginia. Partial POC states include Washington, Wisconsin, New Hampshire, Maryland, Nebraska, Iowa, and North Carolina.

In other states there is a system that allows using specific permits that replace the necessity of running a NICS check. Usually these are states that have a highly exact procedure (in which a FBI background check is done) for attaining a concealed firearms permit. Twenty-two states have this type of option at this particular time, when this article is being published. You can check the FBI's website to find out if your state is one of the states included and to understand how this process works in your state of residence!

You can find this information on the FBI's official website: fbi.gov. It's a useful resource to find information on any other questions you could have about how the NICS works!

FFL Inventory

In the beginning of the year, it had become almost hopeless to find anything gun related because of the high demand and swift exhaustion in shops. Certain items remain difficult to be found, in particular ammo. We have decided to feature one of our wholesalers, Owen from Davidson's, and ask him what his inventory related experience was, now that the year is almost over. Coming up: FFLTRUST and Owen one on on.

FFLTRUST: What are the producers up to? Are products going to be available and on stock soon?

OL: The availability of products is pretty tenacious. We see many great items walking through our doors.

FFLTRUST: Are dealer sales going well?

OL: It depends. Some a bit slow others are quite busy. Their own marketing involvement is also a factor. Big box store openings in the vicinity of my dealers, also influences business.

FFLTRUST: Which products are the most solicited by clients nowadays?

OL: Top sellers are handguns and home defense products. Affordable AR's and hunting season equipment are also on the move.

FFLTRUST: What are your trend predictions?

OL: This is a good question....I don't know, really. I suppose various types of hand guns, long guns and home defense items will be selling well for another while.. Plinking Ammo seems to be a rarity now. We could sell all the 22 LR, 223, 9MM, 38SP etc we get in the shop. I receive daily calls for affordable Ammo. I feel positive about 2014. There might still be some ups and downs but I believe it will be a good year.

It would appear the firearm industry is on a clear rebound path. The great news for wholesalers, dealers and clients is that inventory is well on its way to fill the empty store shelves. If you have any news on the inventory in your area, we'd love to hear all about it! What has arrived back in the inventories near you? What are the items that are hard to come by in your area? And don't forget, if you feel ready to get your own FFL license,
